Performance Management Reviews:
Have you received yours?

According to the IUPUI Staff Handbook (http://www.hra.iupui.edu/hrpolicies/StaffHandbook.pdf), “Performance management is a continuous process of planning, communication, evaluation and development. To assist you in understanding your work responsibilities and performance expectations, you should receive performance feedback on an as-needed basis or a minimum of one feedback session annually.”

Staff Council asked your unit representatives what topics they feel should be addressed by the Council or what concerns they have about the environment around them. As you can imagine, responses were varied including the inevitable parking concern felt by many. One additional area that did stand out was performance management – or lack thereof.

Human Resources Administration believes that performance management “is a critical component of employee/employer interaction.” Our goal is that all staff members are having conversations with their supervisors to establish benchmarks for acceptable job performance; all staff members are receiving ongoing feedback about their performance from their supervisors; and all staff members are receiving a formal review at least once annually. Engaging in effective performance management helps to ensure staff members are acknowledged for their contributions and provided with support to improve work performance. Assistant Vice Chancellor for Human Resources Ellen Poffenberger says, “Performance conversations are critically important. Employees deserve the opportunity for open dialogue, constructive feedback, and discussions about professional growth and development.”

Data from the last two Staff Surveys, conducted in 2006 and 2009, show that in 2006, 63% of responding staff reported that performance evaluations were conducted, and in 2009, 62% indicated that they received performance evaluations. In terms of satisfaction with the way in which the evaluations were conducted, in 2006 46% of survey respondents were satisfied with the process, and in 2009, 49% were satisfied with the way they were conducted.

This data reinforces the importance of increasing the incidence of performance evaluations as well improving the way in which evaluations are conducted. This is a key priority for the campus, and Human Resources Administration, with the support of campus administration, is committed to improving the approach to performance management. It will benefit our valued staff members, and the campus as a whole.

If you have not received a performance review in the past year, ask your supervisor about their performance management process for your unit. Let them know you want to be effective in your role and receive feedback on your performance. HRA has all the information and tools needed for performance management. The information can found at: http://www.hra.iupui.edu/hra/mgmtresources/resourcesperformance.asp. HRA provides additional consulting services for units seeking further support.

Have You Heard?

..... About the incentive plan that will help IU employees contain healthcare costs when they raise in 2011?

As Assistant Vice Chancellor for Human Resources Ellen Poffenberger reported at the January Staff Council meeting, the university will be raising healthcare premiums in 2011. Employees (and covered spouses or domestic partners) will be able to earn “credits” to help reduce the cost of the premiums. To find out more about this, click on the link below to take you to the News Release of January 11, 2010, from the IU News Room.
